Who owns the seas has always been a difficult concept. In 1945, President Truman extended U.S. jurisdiction to the end of its continental shelf. The continuation of the land mass underwater until it drops down to the ocean floor. Then the U.S. built the world's first off shore oil platform out of sight of land in the Gulf of Mexico in 1947, 10 and a half miles off the Louisiana coast. That started a race to claim oceanic resources. This 41 a lot of countries clashing over their perceived rights. For example, the UK and Iceland had no less than three disputes known as "Cod Wars" over the fish in 42 are now Icelandic waters.

To mediate these disputes, the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea or UNCLOS was drawn up and came into force in 1994. It carved up maritime territory into four main sections, typically 43 from the low water line on a nation's shores. Within the territorial waters, a state can regulate use and has ownership over any resources found within. Foreign states can sail through but they have to 44 the nation's laws. Within the contiguous zone, a state can continue to enforce laws in four specific areas, customs, taxation, immigration and pollution. Within the exclusive economic zone, the state has the sole rights over natural resources but foreign states may sail through, lay underwater cables and even pass through for military reasons. And on the continental shelf, a state has the rights to resources in the subsoil of the continental shelf but not the water column above 45 it is beyond the EEZ. Although 168 parties have ratified UNCLOS, it has far from resolved maritime territory disputes.

A historic sailing ship has crashed just days after taking to the water following an extensive renovation project. The 121-foot Elbe No. 5 collided with the 466-foot Astrosprinter on the Elbe river near Hamburg, Germany. Eight passengers 46 the Elbe No. 5 were injured in the collision. They were rescued from the boat and taken to different local hospitals. Emergency services secured the ship because of fears of oil leaks and a rescue company will investigate the possibility of recovering the wreck.

The cause of the crash is not yet known, but an investigation continues. The Hamburg Maritime Foundation, 47 owns the ship, released a statement on the accident. "We are deeply saddened by the collision. Our thoughts are with the passengers and the members of the ship's crew who were hurt," 48 the statement.

The Elbe No. 5 was built in 1883, making it the city's oldest fully wooden ship and it recently underwent significant renovation work. After decades as a pilot boat 49 larger ships into Hamburg's port, the Elbe No. 5 was used as a houseboat by an American journalist. In 2002, it was brought home to be used as a pleasure boat for tourists by the Hamburg Maritime Foundation. The renovation project was announced in September 2018. Just over a week later, the collision wrecked the historic vessel. Wolfgang Bentz, who was involved in the restoration, said that he had watched over the wreck after the accident and couldn't sleep all night. 50, Bentz believes the Elbe No. 5 could sail again. "It's made of wood and had some damage before," he said. "Let's see what further damage is added in the rescue effort."
