Climate change has been going on for more than a century. The global climate gets warmer and warmer and the average annual temperature keeps rising. This makes sea water heat up and expand, thus taking up more space and causing a significant rise in the sea level.

Another cause of sea level rise has to do with icebergs. As icebergs melt due to rising temperatures, huge blocks of ice move into the sea at the poles. This phenomenon also significantly elevates the sea level. Currently, the sea level is eight inches higher than it was a century ago. Scientists predict that by the end of this century, the sea level is very likely to be three feet higher than it is today.

Sea level rise is threatening to submerge some countries. Among them, island countries are especially vulnerable. For example, Tuvalu, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, will likely become the first country to disappear underwater over the coming decades. Other victims suffering the same fate include Kiribati, the Maldives, and the Marshall Islands, to name just a few.

Human activities are impacting the climate system. People have been burning coal and petroleum for a long period of time. Such fossil fuels release greenhouse gases to the atmosphere when they are burned. Greenhouse gases act like a sweater around the Earth for they are good at trapping heat and making temperatures rise.

As it stands, sea level rise does not pose threats to island countries alone. Scientists are already warning that some of the world's major cities could be underwater by the end of the century. Needless to say, action to protect them should be taken as soon as possible.

- 41 What is the main purpose of this passage?
- (A) To show how fossil fuels are formed in cities.
(B) To clarify the causes and effects of sea level rise.
(C) To prove the importance of South Pacific countries.
(D) To trace the movements of icebergs on a global scale.
- 42 Which of the following statements is NOT true according to this passage?
- (A) Greenhouse gases make temperatures rise because they can easily trap heat.
(B) Today the sea level is several feet higher than it used to be one hundred years ago.
(C) Rising temperatures cause icebergs to melt, which in turn causes the sea level to rise.
(D) Tuvalu, Kiribati, the Maldives, and the Marshall Islands are all affected by sea level rise.

- 43 Which of the following words is closest in meaning to the word “vulnerable” in this passage?
 (A) Adequate. (B) Productive. (C) Systematic. (D) Unprotected.
- 44 Which of the following is NOT a problem caused by climate change?
 (A) Flooding. (B) Famine. (C) Rise of temperature. (D) Greenhouse effects.
- 45 What is the author’s general attitude while mentioning the island countries?
 (A) Ironical. (B) Tolerant. (C) Humorous. (D) Pessimistic.

Team composition has long been known to play a large role in the effectiveness of teams because it determines the amount of knowledge and skill team members have to apply to the team task—in terms of both task completion and working interdependently. Although surface-level differences in team composition (e.g., demographics) can affect team performance, deep-level characteristics such as intelligence and personality have been found to have larger impacts. Individual intelligence, also called cognitive ability, is the ability to perform cognitive tasks. Individuals with higher intelligence are better able to consistently perform cognitive tasks well. The same ability that enables individuals to perform well on individual cognitive tasks should also be relevant for similar cognitive tasks that are assigned to teams, so they are higher performers in job settings that require cognitive performance. Team output is therefore a function of the individual contributions of its members. The effects of personality, on the other hand, can vary depending on the specific context involved. Often, personality characteristics create patterns of behavior such that people high in a given personality trait tend to behave and respond to others in similar ways. When entering a new team without prior established practices, individuals’ personalities will shape their initial behaviors in a new team and how they react to the behavior of others. The central tendency of members’ behaviors will develop the team’s common behaviors through shared interactions. For example, if many team members are high in extraversion, initial behaviors are more likely to be social and gregarious, and the response to those behaviors would be positive, social, and gregarious. The few team members lower in extraversion are likely to avoid challenging the emerging central tendency in behavior. Thus, team mean personality traits are highly impactful in forging group norms, shaping subsequent interactions between members.

- 46 What is the main idea of this passage?
 (A) Team performance can be a joint function of individual’s personality and intelligence.
 (B) The role of Intelligence outweighs that of personality in predicting team performance.
 (C) Personality traits are more impactful in determining effectiveness of teams.
 (D) Successful team work requires more than personality traits and individual intelligence.
- 47 According to the passage, what is the tone of the passage?
 (A) Cynical. (B) Intense. (C) Objective. (D) Playful.
- 48 Which of the following personality traits is closest in meaning to “extraversion”?
 (A) Indifference. (B) Reliability. (C) Sociability. (D) Anxiety.
- 49 What does the pronoun they in the passage refer to?
 (A) Behaviors. (B) Individuals. (C) Practices. (D) Personalities.
- 50 Which of the following statements is true according to the passage?
 (A) Teams comprised of more intelligent people who are higher individual performers should perform better.
 (B) If many team members are low in extraversion, the response to gregarious behaviors would be positive.
 (C) The effects of personality in team performance can be consistent across a variety of social contexts.
 (D) Only individuals with high intelligence can help develop their team’s work practices when they join a new team.
